

Claims

The invention claimed is:

1. A method for the transfer of message packets through a communication adapter, said method comprising the steps of:

5 receiving said packets through an interface connected to a data processing node whose memory is the source of information to be transferred; and processing message packet header information with a programmable instruction processor capable of recognizing commands and data for transfer of information within said message packet directly to memory locations within a targeted node.